

52 PENITENT ONES.

Students, Would-Bes and Nonde-scripts in Court.

Tremendous Haul of Fish in the Tenderloin Police Net.

State Senator Murphy Intercedes for an Alleged Nephew.

All the collegians, the alleged rebels, who ape the rest, and the riffraff which follows in the wake of the fake collegian, who were baskeeted in the drag-net of Capt. McCormick's "dearly" detectives and policemen last night for disturbing the peace in the theater and on Broadway, were brought before Justice Koch, in Jefferson Market Police Court, this morning.

They numbered in all fifty-two, and an altogether pimpernelish crew, though half of them were fortunate enough to have survived ball and scabbard in night of malevolent mirth in a station-house cell. Most of them presented evidences of having continued their conviviality during the night, even if they had not repeated their caperings.

The courtroom was crowded, and the atmosphere was fetid, and mockingly reminiscent of every variety of saloon, excepting the one which has no taxons to clear the deck of the list of callow offenders, as he was to dispense the throng that overflowed the judicial chamber.

The first one called was Frank Miller, a fashionably-dressed young man, who came to the bar, and was arrested for running up Broadway and Thirty-fourth street. He explained that he was anxious to take the 9:30 o'clock train for Boston, and Justice Koch discharged him.

Miller was said, however, to be a naval cadet. He was in a group of six reported to be a gang of Detectives Lang and Sullivan, at Broadway and Thirty-fourth street, and in whom one ex-collegian, John J. Quinn, was active. They were all hauled out after midnight by Ex-Mayor Hewitt, and this morning a Mr. Agnew, of the New York City Attorney's office, in their behalf, and asked that the indulgence be granted.

Their legal friends, Forest Rollins, Frank Wilson, Johnson, E. Vernon, Charles Ross, and Auguste E. Ladd, attorneys to be a cause. The quintet were in a notorious all-night restaurant on Sixth avenue, near Thirtieth street. It was reported that Miller, of Eighth street, is said to be a son of Major-General Rollins, of the Royal Horse Artillery.

This blood of live revellers hadn't any one to intercede for them, and they were each fined $5.

Agnew told with an impudent face his clients "do nothing except to complain that it wasn't fair for two or three big walters to 'break' her little 'flock'."

Judge Koch told this delegation that other people had rights that must be respected, and the hour had arrived.

"I shall not permit you to go seat-free," he added, "not even you, Agnew." At this point in the proceedings, Senator George M. Clegg, of Brooklyn, and was invited to a seat at Justice Koch's left. The Senator appeared somewhat active, and the next group assembled up in the rear.

They were Harris Mann, Robert Harrison and Clarence Pittman of Pittman, Pittman & Co., and W. G. H. Washington, a prosperous looking business man, went before Justice Koch, and with an air of active interest. They were in fact, the leaders of the next group to be tried.

He had been a student at Princeton, and his relatives are absent from him.

"I can't understand how these statements could have been made by me," he said, "but I will stand by them."

He tried to explain his conduct to the court, but his vocabulary got all entangled with his thoughts, and partly because of his lack of education, he failed to make himself understood.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

Senator Murphy leaned over and said something in an undertone to Justice Koch, and the latter was whispering in court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He had been a student at Princeton, and his appearance plainly indicated that he had shown a "dearly" beneath his waistcoat. He tried to explain his conduct to the court, but his vocabulary got all entangled with his thoughts, and partly because of his lack of education, he failed to make himself understood.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.

He was then asked if he had any friends in such good taste. He had no friends who was a Senator, and when a policeman told him, turned dismally upon the court that Pittman was a nephew of a distant relative of the Senator's.